MOUNT MARKETING

SAMPLE CASE STUDY

Offer clarity for a technical service business.

A fictional sample showing how Mount Marketing could reposition a specialist engineering offer so buyers understand it faster and sales conversations start with better context.

BUSINESS

Calder Ventilation Systems

SECTOR

Industrial ventilation and compliance support

SUPPORT

Messaging, website copy and sales assets

Photo source: Sergey Sergeev / Pexels

Sample work: This is a fictionalised example created to show how Mount Marketing could package technical work into commercially useful marketing and sales content.

The Challenge

Calder Ventilation Systems had strong technical delivery, but its website and sales language listed everything it could do without helping buyers understand where the business was strongest. Prospects were seeing capability, but not a clear offer.

The business needed sharper positioning that would make it easier for operations managers, facilities teams and procurement contacts to see what Calder did, why it mattered, and when to enquire.

The Approach

Mount Marketing reframed the business around three clearer service pillars, simplified technical language without removing credibility, and turned that messaging into copy the team could use across the website and in sales conversations.

The goal was not to "dumb it down", but to make the complex easier to follow so the commercial value of the service was easier to grasp.

Deliverables

- Positioning and message framework
- Rewritten homepage and service page copy
- Sales summary sheet for outreach and follow-up
- Short LinkedIn adaptation to reinforce the repositioning
- Case study structure for future project proof

The Outcome

The revised offer made it easier to explain what Calder actually wanted to be known for. Service pages became easier to skim, internal conversations were more consistent, and the team had sharper language to use in proposals and discovery calls.

Instead of listing everything equally, the business could now lead with its most valuable work and support that positioning with clearer proof.

> "We now sound more commercial without losing the technical substance that buyers expect from us."
>
> Sample stakeholder quote for a fictionalised case study

Sample case study for Mount Marketing. Replace this page later with a real client story when available.